In a very definite way the problem of the rural school would seem to be very closely connected with that of good country roads.

Human beings don't relish spoiled or moldy food. Neither do domestic animals. If the latter are compelled to eat such food it does them more harm than good, so there is nothing gained.

Kansas City, Mo., has recently passed an ordinance forbidding the working of horses more than twelve hours out of twenty-four. The same ordinance prohibits the working of crippled horses.

Feeding experiments seem to show that from the standpoint of nutritive value pumpkins are worth about two-thirds as much as silage, their feeding value being worth about $2 per ton as a ration for cattle, sheep or hogs.

The guinea fowl is said to have as toothsome flesh as any fowl on the list. This may be true, but the average farmer would want to have a guarantee that it was something pretty fine to put up with the everlasting racket of the fowls as they ranged about the place.

In Nicollet county, Minn., is a rural school that is conducting night classes in agriculture. The school was recently visited by the farmers' club organizer of the State Agricultural college, Mr. Bush, who reports that the schoolhouse was nearly filled by the members of the class. The classes are held at night, so that the farmers need not be kept from their work.

Pretty soon now it will be time to start the tomato seed. The writer saved the seed from the best specimens of several varieties of tomatoes last summer and fall and will be interested in noting whether the average size and quality of the fruit of the coming season will be better than that which the patch produced last year.

An apple tree belonging to a ranchman living in Los Angeles county, Cal., has aroused considerable interest owing to the fact that successive crops which it has borne have been of different type and color. The apples of the first crop were light in color and of medium size, while the following crop was dark red in color and in no way resembled the preceding one.

The state experiment station of South Dakota has 2,000 pounds of hardy alfalfa seed which is to be distributed among the farmers of the state free of cost. Twenty-five pounds will be allowed each county, while but an ounce of seed will be allowed each farmer. The seed was obtained at a cost of $4 a pound from the wind swept plains of Siberia with the idea in mind that it would be especially adapted to the conditions found in the state.

At the national corn and grain show held recently at Dallas, Tex., the sweepstakes prize from the northern zone was awarded to G. D. Van Sickle of Warren, Minn., who is one of the field crop breeders of the state experiment farm. The judges in charge of the show decided that the samples of wheat shown were the finest ever exhibited in the history of the association. At the same show J. P. Nash of Clyde Park, Mont., was awarded first honors in the world's championship class on a spring wheat sample.

A modern farm home which is being completed in the neighborhood in which the writer lives is to be lighted by an electric plant installed on the place. A two and a half horsepower gasoline engine furnishes the motor power for the operation of the dynamo. As a reserve feature batteries are employed which are charged while the engine is doing other work. Lights are also placed in the barn and other buildings at convenient points, while the wires running to the house will also furnish motor power for the operation of the sewing machine, the vacuum cleaner, heating the electric irons, etc.

With a view to preventing useless expense and waste in the printing and distribution of government bulletins the department will hereafter have printed at the bottom of the title page of each publication a brief paragraph stating accurately the nature of the material, the class of readers for whom it is intended and also the section of the country to which the information and accompanying suggestions are applicable. This plan ought to accomplish what is aimed at and will prove a convenient reference that should increase the demand for the publications of the department among those who will be chiefly and directly benefited thereby.

HELPS TO AGRICULTURE.

Many Animals and Birds Are Good
Friends of the Farmer.

Predacious animals and birds have an important part to perform in their capacity as natural enemies to crop destroying insects and pests, according to the biennial survey of the department of agriculture. The annual damage to crops by insect and mammal pests in the United States now amounts to many millions of dollars, which is the result largely of the encroachment of new insect enemies and rodent pests and the destruction by man of the natural enemies of these crop destroying pests.

If meadow mice were always present the red tailed hawk would rarely touch other food. It is when their normal food is scarce that predatory birds and animals are from necessity forced to take what they can find and thus become trespassers on man's property.

The coyote and great horned owl in rabbit infested regions and in vineyards, orchards, meadows or gardens overrun by field mice are among the best friends of man, but on the other hand in thickly settled regions comparatively free from rabbits and mice both have to be summarily dealt with, as does the coyote in sections where sheep raising is an important industry.

The mink is indefatigable in its search for meadow mice and other marsh loving rodents. The weasel, while individually it has acquired the poultry habit, is one of nature's most efficient checks upon the hordes of meadow mice and other rodent crop destroyers. The skunk renders important service by destroying immense numbers of mice, white grubs, grasshoppers, crickets, cutworms, hornets, wasps and other noxious forms. The badger is valuable in destroying ground squirrels, prairie dogs, gophers and other burrowing animals, and farmers should bear in mind that hawks and owls feed largely on noxious rodents and the larger insects, such as grasshoppers, crickets and May beetles. There are two kinds of hawks that should be kept in check—namely, the sharp skinned and Cooper variety, which feed almost entirely on wild birds and poultry.
